This collection includes a wide-ranging and candid interview conducted by the editors, touching on such topics as the role of art as an active, shaping force in society; the relationship between art and political institutions; dramatic production and theory; the art of adaptation; and Albee's methods and purposes as a playwright and director. The essays exemplify dramatic, literary, linguistic and psychological approaches to Albee's work and range from detailed interpretations of individual plays to broad overviews. They discuss Albee's admitted concern with the problem of "knowing" and his frequent use of abstraction and allegory as a means of exploring this theme in his work. Other topics covered are: Albee's use of elements of Pirandellian drama, the vaudevillian form of Counting the Ways, ritual and initiation in The Zoo Story and a psychological reading of Seascape. Nación Genízara examines the history, cultural evolution, and survival of the Genízaro people. The contributors to this volume cover topics including ethnogenesis, slavery, settlements, poetics, religion, gender, family history, and mestizo genetics. Fray Angélico Chávez defined Genízaro as the ethnic term given to indigenous people of mixed tribal origins living among the Hispano population in Spanish fashion. They entered colonial society as captives taken during wars with Utes, Apaches, Comanches, Kiowas, Navajos, and Pawnees. Genízaros comprised a third of the population by 1800. Many assimilated into Hispano and Pueblo society, but others in the land-grant communities maintained their identity through ritual, self-government, and kinship. Today the persistence of Genízaro identity blurs the lines of distinction between Native and Hispanic frameworks of race and cultural affiliation. This is the first study to focus exclusively on the detribalized Native experience of the Genízaro in New Mexico.

Handbook of Clinical Behavior Therapy with the Elderly Client Springer

Although we speak of "the elderly" as if there were one body of people with common characteristics, older adults are more heterogeneous than any other population. People over the age of 65 are also the fastest-growing segment of the population in the United States, currently numbering 25 million. The majority of older adults reside in their communities; a small fraction of them are cared for in institutions. Most may expect to experience some kind of physical impairment. Approximately a quarter of the population may expect to suffer a mental health impairment. While traditional therapies have not been especially effective for older adults, behavior therapy has shown exceptional promise as a treatment modality. This book presents a comprehensive explication of the relatively new field of behavioral gerontology. It was written for the clinician interested in the interaction of medical, environmental, and psychological variables and their effects on treatment of elderly clients and for the researcher who will be looking to extend knowledge about interventions with this population. It will be useful for the graduate student in clinical psychology, as well as the experienced clinician, who will want to include the elderly in his or her therapeutic population.
